Where he has been taking another course of lectures at the post graduate school.

In this course the Doctor had the benefit of hearing lectures from some of the most renowned specialists of the world, such as Dr. Armand Paris, Frederic Schauta of Vienna, Dr. Thos. Moore Madden of Dublin, Dr. Joseph Price of Philadelphia, Dr. Howard A. Kelley of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, and many other leading specialists too numerous to mention.

"JUSTICE"

Medical science, in the past two years and even in the past year, has made progress and advancement in practical means of mastering the various chronic diseases, especially in the last stage of progress witnessed in the new science of electricity. A few years ago, in the treatment of chronic diseases, the physician was limited to the direct, specific, and local nervous diseases to permanently remedy, which was regarded as a triumph, though today their ready and complete mastery is not considered a remarkable feat in itself. The new science of electricity has made it possible for the scientist, working together with their wonderful improvement in the appliance used as well as in its handling and application.

Dr. Terrill has the latest improved instruments, remedies and appliances for the treatment of all chronic diseases.

THE ABOVE IS A LIST of the instrument used by Dr. Terrill in the examination for heart and all nose and throat diseases. Instruments and medicine furnished for home treatment and the patient can gain more in all curable cases.

Dr. Terrill has the WATERBURY TRIUMPH INHALER which has given such wonderful satisfaction in the eastern hospitals in the treatment of all diseases of the respiratory organs, as asthma, bronchitis, hay fever and consumption.

would seem that a tall income must be produced according to the value held upon the land. In some directions from the center of Rome, buildings are being erected, and land for an ordinary residence lot, in a rather poor locality, compared with any of our suburbs, would be worth about 50 or 40 per cent. higher than the prices we ask.

Even in Cairo, Egypt, the price of lots along the business streets would astonish an American. I asked the proprietor of an English store called the Manchester, located near Shepheard's hotel, what rent he paid. The store was about 25 feet front by about 40 feet deep, with a small annex half as large. He answered that he paid about $2,000 per annum. It did not look to be worth over $500. Cairo has a popula-

She looks well to the ways of her household, but she doesn't bother about other people's. She—

"You didn't hear me out, Miss," said Nancy, smilingly. "There's one respect in which my ideal differs from you Mrs. Wsley."

"What's that? I suppose your ideal would never commit the indiscretion of matrimony?" jeered Prissilla.

Even in Jerusalem a boom is in progress, on account of the railroad having been extended to the city, and lots were selling for $500 to $800 that we would consider high at $300; and I discovered in nearly every city I visited, even in old Athens, which is rapidly increasing in population under the administration of King George, that lots were selling on the outskirts for $300 to $400.—Chicago Post.

Catherine De Medici's Doctor.

Pharmlus, like many other physicians of those days, was much addicted to philosophy and mathematics, but, having taken to medicine, he speedily attained a great practice. Henry II., as Dauphin, and afterward as king, was his constant friend. Among the most grateful of his patients was Catherine de Medici, who believed that his skill had saved her from a state of childlessness, and who gave him on the birth of her first-born ten thousand dollars, ordering that a like sum should be paid to him at the birth of each succeeding

"Nancy," began Priscilla, as she turned her gloves inside out and unfastened her veil. "Nancy, I've discovered my ideal woman."

"Have you, indeed?" inquired Nancy.

In slightly skeptical tones. "Who is she and how long have you known her?"

"She's Mrs. Wyseley and I've known her about four hours," replied Priscilla promptly in accents that defied her friend to jeer at the length of her acquaintance with the ideal woman. So Nancy contented herself by remarking "Ah!" in a superior way and asking what Mrs. Wyseley was like.

"Well, in the first place, she's young enough to be jolly and she's old enough to be sensible. She's beautiful enough to be admired by men, and unaffected enough to be liked by women. She has a better head than he liked Syllius. He says he was a pale, lean man of about fifty, who loved his study, and was full of domestic affection. "How do you know?" the critical Nancy interposed, and Priscilla stopped suddenly in her torrent of praise.

"Why, why," she stammered. "Why, you can tell. She was lurching at the Robbins' with me and I could see. And Nettie Robbins told me a lot about her when she was gone. Don't you think such a woman about perfect?"

"O, yes, if she's really so," said Nancy indifferently. "My perfect woman, in the first place, is absolutely healthy. She's vigorous and enthusiastic, but her vigor and enthusiasm never degen-

Natural Kindness.

A formal politeness calls the affections and pellets those who would naturally be drawn together; so she does an assumed manner which is insincere. The courtesy which ranks so highly, and the lack of which is often deplored, is the natural and graceful expression of a kindly feeling. But it is tender and easily crushed; it is delicate, and must be nourished and cherished, or the rude storms of life will sweep it away. Let us protect and honor it as it deserves, and it will in turn protect and preserve for us some of the dearest and best possessions that life has to offer.—Drake's Magazine.
